Purpose and Details

Provide a brief description of the trip.

The Vanderbilt Policy Accelerator (VPA) will convene a small group of congressional staffers, think tank experts, and academics to discuss key issues of political economy and regulation. Via a series of academic presentations and small group discussions at Vanderbilt University, the goal is to facilitate policy conversations and develop a more comprehensive understanding of the legal history and contemporary political landscape on key issues facing lawmakers today.

Explain how the purpose of the trip relates to your organization's mission.

The Vanderbilt Policy Accelerator (VPA) focuses on a small number of cutting-edge topics in political economy and regulation. We bring research, education, and policy proposals in these areas from infancy to maturity and periphery to centrality. From antitrust to trade, swift changes are taking place that are reshaping how policymakers and the general public think about economic policy. These changes create an opportunity to advance new paradigms, research, and policy ideas. This convening is intended to bring together key decision makers, academics, and other thought leaders to discuss emerging economic policy ideas, including in industrial policy, trade, antitrust, tech platforms, and air travel, in addition to broader trends in economic policy.

Dear Ms. Smith,

I write to invite you to attend "New Ideas in Political Economy," a convening which will be hosted by the Vanderbilt Policy Accelerator for Political Economy & Regulation (VPA) at Vanderbilt University in Nashville, Tennessee, on March 15-17.

As you know, Vanderbilt is one of America's leading universities, and we are home to a robust community of teachers and scholars working on cutting-edge ideas in political economy and regulation. Our aim for this convening is to gather a small group of congressional staffers, think tank experts, and academics to discuss emerging economic policy ideas, including in industrial policy, trade, antitrust, tech platforms, and air travel, in addition to broader trends in economic policy.

We can, of course, cover your travel and travel-related expenses, and we are currently working to ensure that the convening complies with privately-sponsored travel guidelines, per the Select Committee on Ethics. Please let us know as soon as possible if you can join us, so we can begin making arrangements for your trip.

Thank you for your consideration and we look forward to discussing potential arrangements to host you here at Vanderbilt.

Sincerely,
