9:15 – 11 AM: Roundtable Discussion:

Global Competition: AI and the Battle for Technological Leadership

AI has become central to geopolitical, strategic and security competition. This session examines how different actors—China, the Gulf States, Europe, and Africa—are approaching and developing AI tools and the infrastructure to adopt them for economic growth, national security, and political influence. Panelists will explore China's state-driven AI strategy, the Gulf's heavy investment in AI infrastructure, Europe's focus on regulation, and Africa's emerging role in AI adoption. The discussion will also address critical pressure points, including export controls, semiconductor supply chains, and the policy levers the U.S. can use to maintain its technological edge.

Speakers will address the following questions:

- How does China's centralized, state-driven approach to AI development compare to the U.S.'s more decentralized, private-sector-led model?
- How are the Gulf States leveraging AI investment as a geopolitical tool, and what are the implications for U.S. interests?

- Does Europe's strong regulatory stance on AI hinder its competitiveness in the global AI race, or will the so-called "Brussels effect" create a framework that others will eventually follow?
- What role does Africa play in the AI landscape, and how should the U.S. engage with emerging AI markets on the continent?
- How effective are current U.S. export controls on AI-related technologies, and what additional steps should be taken to secure semiconductor supply chains?

Speakers:

Kayla Blomquist, Director, Oxford China Policy Lab

11 – 11:15 AM: Break11:15 AM – 1 PM: Roundtable Discussion:Economic, Jobs, and Labor Impact

AI is already reshaping the U.S. economy—while it is increasing productivity and restructuring entire sectors, it is raising difficult questions about the future of work for U.S. workers and companies. This discussion will explore how AI is likely to affect labor markets in both the short and long term, including sectoral job displacement, wage pressure, and new opportunities for growth and investment in the U.S. and globally. It will also address how policymakers can balance innovation with workforce resilience through education, training, and targeted investment.

Speakers will address the following questions:

- How does AI change the nature of productivity and economic competitiveness at the national level—and what levers does the federal government have to shape outcomes?
- Which sectors of the U.S. economy and which jobs are most vulnerable to AI-driven disruption, and which are most likely to benefit?
- How can policymakers ensure that workers—particularly in lower-income and rural communities—are not left behind in the AI economy?
- What investments are needed in education, workforce retraining, and apprenticeship to prepare Americans for AI-impacted jobs?

AI and Cybersecurity: Defending Against Next Generation Threats

Increasingly powerful AI is reshaping both cyber defense and cyber offense. AI is being used to detect threats, automate security responses, and fortify digital infrastructure—but it is also enabling more sophisticated cyberattacks, including AI-generated phishing, deepfake deception, and turbocharged hacking. This session explores the evolving cybersecurity landscape, the risks AI poses to national security and critical infrastructure, and the policies and technologies needed to protect against AI-driven threats. Panelists will also discuss how governments and private-sector leaders can collaborate to ensure AI enhances, rather than undermines, cybersecurity.

Speakers will address the following questions:

- How is AI transforming both cyber offense and defense, and what emerging threats should we be most concerned about?
- What role should the federal government play in regulating AI-driven cybersecurity threats, particularly regarding critical infrastructure?
- How can AI be used to detect and mitigate threats faster than traditional cybersecurity methods?
- What are the risks of AI-generated misinformation and deepfakes in cyber warfare and political interference?
- How should businesses and governments collaborate to create global norms for AI security while maintaining competitive advantages?

Speakers:

Rob Joyce, Founder, Joyce Cyber; former NSA Director of Cybersecurity

Ciaran Martin, Founding CEO of the National Cyber Security Centre and Professor, University of Oxford
