History of Congressional Travel

The Aspen Institute is a nonpartisan educational organization whose mission is to foster leadership grounded in enduring values and provide an inclusive forum for the exchange of ideas. Across policy domains including health, economic opportunity, and technology, the Institute has a long history of engaging congressional staff through convenings and professional development. For over 20 years, the Education & Society Program has operated the Senior Education Congressional Staff Network, a bicameral and bipartisan network designed to deepen staff knowledge of federal education policy implementation and build lasting, cross-partisan relationships on Capitol Hill. Programming includes topic-specific retreats, off-the-record expert webinars, and site visits. For example, in Spring 2024, the Network brought congressional staff to Birmingham and Montgomery, Alabama to examine the impact of the state's Science of Reading and Numeracy laws on districts, schools, and students firsthand.

Educational Activities

The Aspen Institute's Education & Society Program holds numerous educational activities — including briefings, roundtables, forums, conferences, and site visits — for a diverse range of attendees including federal and state policymakers, business and organizational leaders, and the general public. The program convenes the Cross-Partisan Policy Network, bringing together 80+ education leaders across the ideological spectrum on school choice, career-connected learning, civics, and student engagement; the Urban District Leaders Network, supporting urban school leaders navigating complex policy environments; the Rising Generations Strategy Group, convening emerging field leaders; and the Youth Advisory Partnership, centering youth voices in education policy. Across all programming, the Education & Society Program is committed to cross-partisan dialogue and equipping leaders at every level to make informed decisions for students and families.

Provide a brief description of the trip.

The Aspen Institute's Education & Society Program has a 20-year history of providing nonpartisan educational programming for congressional staff. This site visit to Wisconsin offers participants an immersive learning experience focused on how states are implementing federal education policy under the Every Student Succeeds Act, with particular emphasis on school choice programs operating at the state and local level. Participants will engage directly with district leaders, school administrators, and students across Milwaukee and Madison to observe school choice models in practice and understand their impact on families and communities. This on-the-ground learning is designed to deepen congressional staff knowledge and build cross-partisan relationships that inform evidence-based federal policymaking. As a charter school operating within the Milwaukee Public Schools district, ALBA represents an important dimension of Milwaukee's broader school choice landscape — illustrating how charter designation can enable a district school to innovate and specialize while remaining anchored in the public system. Congressional staff will tour the school to see this model in action, observing classrooms and interacting with students and staff firsthand.

Panelists will discuss how district and charter schools like ALBA are finding ways to differentiate and serve their communities, while also addressing the federal policy and funding questions that shape the choices available to Milwaukee families. This discussion offers congressional staff a candid, ground-level perspective on the opportunities and challenges facing a large urban district navigating the intersection of local innovation and federal policy.

This conversation will surface the priorities, challenges, and federal policy considerations most pressing to the organizations actively shaping and supporting school choice in Wisconsin, rounding out the day's multidimensional look at the state's education ecosystem.

Following the tour, participants will hear from school leadership to have a conversation on the school's experience participating in Wisconsin's Parental Choice Program. The discussion will explore how voucher funding has shaped the school's growth, its model of bilingual and faith-based instruction, and what school choice means for the diverse Madison families Lighthouse serves — offering congressional staff a firsthand perspective on how state choice programs reach underserved communities.
