Subject: Invitation: 10th Aspen Leadership Forum on Retirement Savings | April 8–10, Baltimore
Date: Monday, March 2, 2026 4:46:06 PM

Dear Lila,

It is with great excitement that we invite you to the 10th annual Aspen Leadership Forum on Retirement Savings, taking place April 8–10 at the Baltimore Pendry. For a decade, this Forum has served as a trusted, off-the-record space for leaders across policy, industry, academia, technology, and advocacy to wrestle with the hardest questions in retirement by testing assumptions, surfacing tensions, and advancing ideas that shape the field.

This milestone year comes at a pivotal moment. And this year's Forum will look and feel a little different, as a result. This year, we will focus squarely on expanding access to workplace retirement savings—how we move closer to universal coverage, who is still being left out, and what it will take to close those gaps in durable, scalable ways. With momentum building across states and at the federal level, we believe this is the right time for a smaller, more intentional gathering designed to sharpen thinking and catalyze action.

Please RSVP here no later than March 5. This is a non-transferable invitation for Lila Englander and we respectfully request you do not share this link.

If you are interested in travel and lodging reimbursement, the Institute's legal team will work with you to ensure compliance with relevant ethics rules and regulations for privately sponsored travel, including providing appropriate forms for review and approval by the Ethics office. As a note, those forms are due to the Ethics Committee by March 9.

We hope you will join us in Baltimore for what promises to be a candid, forward-looking conversation among peers who are deeply committed to strengthening the retirement system for workers at all income levels. More details will follow after you register, and we would be honored to have your voice at the table as we mark this important moment for the Forum and the field.

Sincerely,
KC Boas

Aspen Leadership Forum on Retirement Savings

The Future of Retirement Access

Wednesday, April 8

5:00pm Opening Reception: On Second Thought - An Open Mic on Evolving Views

An Aspen-style storytelling reception on intellectual curiosity and (sometimes even) humility. A system as complex as retirement requires leaders who can evolve. This opening session invites participants to reflect on a moment—during this Forum or elsewhere—when they:

- Reconsidered a long-held assumption
- Revised a policy view
- Encountered evidence that complicated their narrative
- You were surprised by a new perspective

The aim is to set the tone for the Forum: rigorous, open, and willing to change.

6:00pm Dinner

Thursday, April 9

8:00 am Breakfast

9:00 am Welcome

Why universal access? And why now? In this opening session, Aspen FSP will frame the challenge and opportunity before us and what this Forum will—and will not—attempt to solve.

9:45 am Things We Thought We Knew

New data prompt us to reevaluate assumptions about savings behavior, auto-features, and enforcement. Participants will be invited to share their new research and first-hand experience as we interrogate:

- Do low-income workers want to save and invest? Can they?
- What actually drives access expansion, employer adoption, and worker participation?
- Is automatic enrollment necessary – or even helpful for the lowest income workers?
- What does it take to make an employer mandate durable and enforceable?

10:45 am Break

11:15 am Four Big Proposals for Universal Retirement Plan Access: Curiously Exploring

the “Why” Behind the Access Design Choices
Today there are four major existing policy proposals for universal coverage: the Retirement Savings for Americans Act, the Automatic Retirement Act, Auto-IRA Plus, and a “TSP-like” solution that was announced at the State of the Union Address. Each of these proposals makes different design choices when it comes to the mechanism for creating access. In this session, architects and advocates unpack key decisions that were made and where there may or may not be flexibility. Rather than debate the merits, participants will surface the underlying drivers, values, and assumptions driving different design choices.

12:15 pm Lunch

1:15 pm Design Choices and Tradeoffs: A Structured Comparison
During this small group exercise, table groups will examine differences across proposals through four lenses:

- Philosophical (role of government vs. market, personal choice vs. paternalism)
- Political (durability and feasibility)
- Operational (administration, enforcement, scalability)
- Household-centered (simplicity, portability, adequacy)

We will conclude with a large-group read-out before going to break.

2:30 pm Networking Break

2:45 pm Access to What? Defining the Minimum Standard
When we talk about access, the mechanism—the “front door”---is only part of the story. Equally important is the question: access to what? In this breakout session, attendees will be strategically assigned to small groups that will define the core features of a retirement savings account that every worker should be able to count on—regardless of which entry point they use. In other words: What constitutes a minimum standard for a retirement savings system that is truly household-centered? Participants will explore how existing vehicles—401(k)s and 403(b)s, Auto-IRAs, Multiple Employer Plans, and the proposed federal “TSP-like” option—could be elevated to meet that standard.
And—for bonus points: How might each model extend meaningful access to gig/independent workers.
The goal is not to defend vehicles as they exist, but to imagine what they would need to become.

4:00 pm Networking Break

4:15 pm Where Are We Converging? Where Are We Not?

In this large group discussion, we will synthesize emerging areas of alignment, persistent tensions, and design questions that require more evidence.

4:45 pm Wrap-up

5:30 pm Depart for dinner

6:00 pm Dinner

Friday, April 10

8:00am Breakfast

9:00am Opening Discussion
What stayed with you overnight?
We'll start with a candid reflection on Day 1: what stuck, what surprised you, and what questions refuse to settle.

9:45am From Ideas to Principles
Moving from policy blueprints to shared design principles. What would a household-centered retirement access system commit to—regardless of vehicle? Grouped by sector, participants will explore what's needed, what evidence is still missing, what your assigned sector would resist and why, and what are those non-negotiables.

11:00am Break

11:20am Toward A (Fuzzy) Vision
Before we depart, we will discuss as a full group:

- Where is there (enough) consensus around a preliminary set of principles?
- What would it take to publish them, or otherwise act upon them?
- Who needs to be at the table next?

Today there are four policy proposals for universal coverage: the Retirement Savings for Americans Act, the Auto-IRA within the Automatic Retirement Act, Auto-IRA Plus, and a "TSP-like" solution that was announced at the State of the Union Address. Aspen Leadership Forum on Retirement Savings

The Future of Retirement Access

Wednesday, April 8

5:00pm Opening Reception: On Second Thought - An Open Mic on Evolving Views

An Aspen-style storytelling reception on intellectual curiosity and (sometimes even) humility. A system as complex as retirement requires leaders who can evolve. This opening session invites participants to reflect on a moment—during this Forum or elsewhere—when they:

- Reconsidered a long-held assumption
- Revised a policy view
- Encountered evidence that complicated their narrative
- You were surprised by a new perspective

The aim is to set the tone for the Forum: rigorous, open, and willing to change.

6:00pm Dinner

Thursday, April 9

8:00 am Breakfast

9:00 am Welcome

Why universal access? And why now? In this opening session, Aspen FSP will frame the challenge and opportunity before us and what this Forum will—and will not—attempt to solve.

9:45 am Things We Thought We Knew

New data prompt us to reevaluate assumptions about savings behavior, auto-features, and enforcement. Participants will be invited to share their new research and first-hand experience as we interrogate:

- Do low-income workers want to save and invest? Can they?
- What actually drives access expansion, employer adoption, and worker participation?
- Is automatic enrollment necessary – or even helpful for the lowest income workers?
- What does it take to make an employer mandate durable and enforceable?

10:45 am Break

11:15 am Four Big Proposals for Universal Retirement Plan Access: Curiously Exploring

the “Why” Behind the Access Design Choices
Today there are four major existing policy proposals for universal coverage: the Retirement Savings for Americans Act, the Automatic Retirement Act, Auto-IRA Plus, and a “TSP-like” solution that was announced at the State of the Union Address. Each of these proposals makes different design choices when it comes to the mechanism for creating access. In this session, architects and advocates unpack key decisions that were made and where there may or may not be flexibility. Rather than debate the merits, participants will surface the underlying drivers, values, and assumptions driving different design choices.

12:15 pm Lunch

1:15 pm Design Choices and Tradeoffs: A Structured Comparison
During this small group exercise, table groups will examine differences across proposals through four lenses:

- Philosophical (role of government vs. market, personal choice vs. paternalism)
- Political (durability and feasibility)
- Operational (administration, enforcement, scalability)
- Household-centered (simplicity, portability, adequacy)

We will conclude with a large-group read-out before going to break.

2:30 pm Networking Break

2:45 pm Access to What? Defining the Minimum Standard
When we talk about access, the mechanism—the “front door”---is only part of the story. Equally important is the question: access to what? In this breakout session, attendees will be strategically assigned to small groups that will define the core features of a retirement savings account that every worker should be able to count on—regardless of which entry point they use. In other words: What constitutes a minimum standard for a retirement savings system that is truly household-centered? Participants will explore how existing vehicles—401(k)s and 403(b)s, Auto-IRAs, Multiple Employer Plans, and the proposed federal “TSP-like” option—could be elevated to meet that standard.
And—for bonus points: How might each model extend meaningful access to gig/independent workers.
The goal is not to defend vehicles as they exist, but to imagine what they would need to become.

4:00 pm Networking Break

4:15 pm Where Are We Converging? Where Are We Not?

In this large group discussion, we will synthesize emerging areas of alignment, persistent tensions, and design questions that require more evidence.

4:45 pm Wrap-up

5:30 pm Depart for dinner

6:00 pm Dinner

Friday, April 10

8:00am Breakfast

9:00am Opening Discussion
What stayed with you overnight?
We'll start with a candid reflection on Day 1: what stuck, what surprised you, and what questions refuse to settle.

9:45am From Ideas to Principles
Moving from policy blueprints to shared design principles. What would a household-centered retirement access system commit to—regardless of vehicle? Grouped by sector, participants will explore what's needed, what evidence is still missing, what your assigned sector would resist and why, and what are those non-negotiables.

11:00am Break

11:20am Toward A (Fuzzy) Vision
